2. Make a precis of the following passage : 15

The habit of reading needs to be grown and cultivated. It can be one of the pleasures of your life and in bargain you gain new knowledge, new words and new styles of expressions. Reading books, periodicals and magazines give a unique type of pleasure. Everybody can't enjoy reading because it requires a level of intelligence, personal interest, understanding, language skill and above all, solitude or ability to detach mind from other things. Reading demands concentrated attention to make sense.

The childhood is the best period when reading habit can be developed. Unfortunately today reading is getting limited to notebooks, exam guides keys and guess papers. The purpose is just to get through tests and not for culture or learning. The reading is getting replaced by seeing movies, watching TV serials of stupid kind, game shows, visiting chat rooms websites, surfing, fiddling with multifunction mobiles and SMSing messages. They can't expand the knowledge base of a student like books can do. The result is that seriousness about life is no more there. Cheap values of little depth are becoming accepted in things. Surely some seriously read books could have added more meaning and positive purpose to the lives of the students. The relationships would have been more sincere and serene, had the words of good books got a chance to season the raw and inexperienced minds.

The company of books is much more rewarding than the company of a mobile phone. The former adds to your knowledge and the latter makes you shallower. Go to the fold of book reading and make your mind richer.

4. Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow :

It is wrong to believe that science has totally eclipsed literature with inspiring zeal. The literature plays a subordinate role to science is equally untrue. Nevertheless, it is undeniable that science has comparatively a wider range for its impact on the physical world than literature. But that does not mean that literature has been incorporated in the realm of science to the extent that it loses its distinct individuality. The reality is that both co-exist without the one overshadowing the other. Those who think that science has pushed literature into shade reducing it to a non-entity seem to be simply imaginative and illogical in the comparisons of their respective merits. It is no doubt unquestionable that products of science are of greater material value than those which make an emotional appeal, e.g. a bridge is of greater use to public than a poem.

But thereby one should not ignore the importance of a poem which will continue to appeal to human mind for time to come. It is indisputable that a scientific theory like the one propounded by Einstein is not without its philosophical import as it lays its impress on the future growth of literature. But to be effective in this respect science should unfold its principles by appealing to human emotions not through crude and concrete material facts. Darwin's theory of Natural Selection in its exposition of the evolution of man by appeal to emotions and imagination of man conducive to the growth of nineteenth century literature. Man's emotional attitude to life vicissitudes of his fortune are coloured by his inherited instincts and faith in his fate, but also by his hope in point of his longevity and betterment of future prospects, oriented by a scientific theory, they give a colour to literature.

Literature feeds the emotional and imaginative hunger of man, in this perspective science will not oust literature but enrich it by its impact on human life. Science can provide amenities of life for human comforts but fails to lend or impart spiritual pleasure. Delight that literature instills in man far transcends the comforts which science provides.

- (a) What is the basic contribution of science to humankind ? 2
- (b) What aspect of human life is fulfilled by works of literature ? 2
- (c) How have the theories propounded by Darwin and Einstein proved conducive to the growth of literature ? 3
- (d) How is science friendly and not hostile to the growth of literature ? 3
- (e) Discuss in brief the main ideas of the passage. 5
